

Porters at Gate 1660-1837

The Sergeant-Porter hath the command of the rest, who have their Waiting by turns, and a lodge in the King's Palace Gate, where they wait with a Black Staff, and take care the Way be kept clear, and no Disorders or Tumults gather'd in, or about the palace.¹

The sergeant porter was appointed by royal warrant. In 1662 the office was reduced to supernumerary status with wages of £11 8s 1d and board wages of £160. In 1664 it was restored in ordinary with the same wages and board wages of £120, increased again to £160 in 1668 but reduced to £53 6s 8d in 1680. The sergeant porter was also allowed fees of honour, which yielded an average of £35 per annum at the start of the eighteenth century. From 1685 the fixed remuneration was set at £120, divided from 1689 into wages of £8 1s 1 1/2d and board wages of £108 11s 10 1/2d. In 1812 the sergeant porter was established at St. James's at £87 increased in the following year to £115. A supernumerary sergeant porter was appointed in 1672, 1681 and 1816. The deputy sergeant porter was appointed by warrant of the Prince Regent to the lord steward. He received £165 per annum.²

The yeoman porters at gate were appointed by lord steward's warrant. Four such servants were appointed in 1660, but only two were allowed on the Establishment of 1 Dec. 1662. They lost diet on this establishment, but received wages of £5 apiece and divided board wages amongst themselves and three grooms of £255 10s. Board wages were settled at £51 2d in 1664. They fell to £35 apiece in 1680. A third yeoman was added in 1680. The Establishment of 1 July 1685 provided for three yeomen at £40 apiece. In 1689 a fourth yeoman porter was added and all were raised to £5 wages and £45 board wages. The yeomen and groom porters at gate were also entitled to fees of honour and, in 1706, received an additional £10 apiece to hire servants 'to attend & sitt up nightly throughout y^e Year, to take care of y^e several Gates.' The Establishment of 1 July 1761 allowed a salary of £50 and an allowance of £10 for each of four yeomen. This became a salary of £60 in 1782. The yeoman porters at gate were also given allowances in kind calculated in 1812 to be worth £54 15s per annum. In 1812 three yeoman porters were made redundant on the St. James's establishment at £49 apiece; a fourth was transferred to the Windsor establishment and fifth was established at Carlton House at £170 per annum. From 1820, there was no distinction of rank between or among the yeomen and groom porters; all were designated yeomen state porters and received £120 per annum.³

Groom porters at gate (not to be confused with the groom porter of the household) were appointed by lord steward's warrant. Three such servants were appointed in 1660. They were established in 1662 at wages of £2 13s 4d and board wages to be divided amongst themselves and two yeomen porters of £255 10s. In 1664 one groom porter was made supernumerary at wages of £2 13s 4d and board wages of £15 per annum. The two remaining ordinary grooms received similar wages and £51 2s in board wages. The number of established groom porters rose to three by 1668, but the posts do not appear to have been filled consistently between 1677 and 1685. Moreover, board wages fell to £27 8s in 1680. James II awarded a salary of £30 to the groom porters. This was raised to £2 13s 4d in wages and £37 6s 8d in board wages in 1689. The groom porters received salaries of £40 and an allowance of £10 on the Establishment of 1

July 1761. This was consolidated into a salary of £50 in 1782. The effective groom porter at gate was also given allowances in kind calculated in 1812 to be worth £67 5s. In 1812 two groom porters at gate were made redundant at St. James's at £41 apiece; a third was transferred to the Windsor establishment; and a fourth was established at Carlton House at £32 per annum. From 1820, the groom porters at gate became state yeomen porters.⁴

Gentlemen Porters at Carlton House 1812-1837

The terminology associated with the porters at Carlton House is confusing. The first gentleman, yeoman and groom porters at Carlton House were referred to, collectively, as gentlemen porters. From 1815 there was also a separate head gate porter. The Establishment of 19 Feb. 1812 lists a the first gentleman porter at Carlton House at £210, a yeoman at £170 and a groom at £35 per annum. By 1829 the three gentlemen porters made £285, £245 and £152, respectively. These offices were transferred to the main court in 1830, when their emoluments were settled at £250 for the first gentleman porter, £200 apiece for two yeomen and £150 for three grooms. In addition, four assistant porters made £125 apiece.¹

The porters at Carlton House were appointed by the lord steward.

Poultry 1660-1761

The poultry provided fruit, greens, butter, eggs and other dairy products for the royal tables.¹ In 1660 the establishment of the poultry consisted of a clerk and a sergeant, appointed by royal warrant, and yeomen and grooms, appointed by lord steward's warrant. In 1662 the remuneration of the clerk was fixed at wages of £6 13s 4d and board wages of £54 15s, in addition to poundage on debentures for goods delivered to the office. He was reduced to supernumerary status in 1664 but restored in ordinary in 1674 with board wages increased to £80 but falling to their previous level in 1680. Between 1685 and 1689 the office was combined with that of clerk of the bakehouse, pastry, scullery and woodyard with a salary of £91 13s 4d. In 1689 the remuneration was fixed at wages of £6 13s 4d and board wages of £73 6s 8d. The office was combined with that of clerk of the bakehouse between 1702 and 1727.²

In 1662 the remuneration of the sergeant was fixed at wages of £11 8s 1½d and board wages of £44 15s. Between 1664 and 1668 the holder of the office was designated sergeant of the poultry and scalding house. The board wages were increased to £54 15s in the former year but reduced to £38 11s 10½d in 1680. In 1673 a supernumerary sergeant was appointed who succeeded to the office shortly afterwards but was reduced to supernumerary status in 1686. The office was abolished in 1689.³

During the early years of Charles II, the number of yeomen fluctuated between the two named in 1660 and the one finally established in 1668. After numerous variations the remuneration was settled at wages of £5 and board wages of £45 in 1689.⁴

Three grooms were appointed in 1660. After some fluctuations the number was fixed at two in 1680. Wages were set at £2, but board wages fluctuated between £27 6s 8d and £40 under Charles II. The salary was settled at £20 in 1685. In 1689 this was replaced by wages of £2 13s 4d and board wages of £37 6s 8d. Supernumerary grooms were appointed in 1662, 1664 and 1685.⁵

The poultry was abolished in 1761.⁶

*The Establishment of 1 Dec. 1662 lists, but does not name, a supernumerary groom of the Poultry: LS 13/31, f. 16v.

Scalding House 1660-1761

The scalding house received, killed and cleaned fowl for dressing by the cooks.¹ In 1660 the establishment of the scalding house consisted of yeomen, grooms and pages, appointed by lord steward's warrant. During the reign of Charles II the number of yeomen was fixed in principle at two, going down to one 1662-64. There was a reduction to one supernumerary in 1686. The place was revived for two holders in 1689. One served from 1701. In 1664 their remuneration was fixed at wages of £5 and board wages of £40. After some variations the board wages were settled at £45 in 1689. In addition, both yeomen and grooms were allowed leftovers and wastage in the office.²

The number of grooms was fixed in principle at two in 1660, but declined to one 1662-64, 1668-74 and 1690-1715. In 1664 their remuneration was fixed at wages of £2 13s 4d and board wages of £36 10s. After some variations the board wages were settled at £37 6s 8d in 1689. Supernumerary grooms were appointed in 1662, 1664, 1677 and 1686.³

Two pages were appointed in 1660, one of which was made supernumerary on the Establishment of 1 December 1662. The ordinary page was eliminated by the Establishment of 1 October 1664. The supernumerary made wages of £2 and board wages of £10 per annum. Board wages rose to £31 8s 7d in 1668. The place was abolished at the promotion of the incumbent in September 1675.⁴

The scalding house was abolished in 1761.⁵

*The Establishment. of 1 Dec. 1662 lists, but does not name, a supernumerary yeoman, groom and page of the Scalding House: LS 13/31, f. 16v

Scullery 1660-1837

The servants of the scullery washed and set out the royal plate and pewter. They also ordered and distributed the court's charcoal.¹ In 1660 the establishment of the scullery consisted of a clerk and a sergeant appointed by royal warrant and yeomen, grooms, pages and children appointed by lord steward's warrant. The fixed remuneration of the clerk, was set at wages of £6 13s 4d and board wages of £54 15s in 1662, rising 1674-80 to £80. In addition, he was allowed poundage on the plate passing into the office. Between 1685 and 1689 the office was combined with that of clerk of the bakehouse, pastry, poultry and woodyard with a salary of £91 13s 4d. In 1689 the remuneration was fixed at wages of £6 13s 3d and board wages of £73 6s 8d. The office was combined with that of clerk of the pastry and woodyard between 1702 and 1761 and was abolished in the latter year.²

The remuneration of the sergeant was fixed at wages of £11 8s 1½d and board wages of £54 15s in 1662. The board wages fell to £38 11s 10½d in 1680. The office was reduced to supernumerary status in 1685.³

Three yeomen were appointed in 1660, with one becoming supernumerary in 1662. In 1664 the wages were fixed at £5 for three yeomen of the woodyard and scullery. The board wages were settled at £40 at the same time but thereafter fluctuated between £26 19s 10¾d in 1668 and £45 12s 3d. in 1674. In 1685 the number of yeomen was reduced to two with salaries of £40, plus lodgings. In 1689 wages of £5 and board wages of £45 were substituted. From 1761 one yeoman served with a salary of £70. In 1812 he was reduced to sinecure status at St. James's with a salary of £120 while a second effective yeoman was appointed at Carlton House at £200. In 1813 the former was granted an addition of £160 in compensation for the abolition of allowances in kind. In 1836 these two officers were replaced by three yeomen, £200, £160 and £125, respectively.⁴

Three grooms appear to have been appointed in 1660, two from 1661, three again in 1664 (to serve the scullery and woodyard) before settling again at two in 1668. In 1664 the wages were fixed at £2 13s 4d, the board wages at £36 10s. Thereafter board wages fluctuated between £26 13s 3d (by the establishment of 1668) and £40 (by that of 1674). In 1685 the number of grooms was reduced to one with a salary of £30. In 1689 it was increased to two with wages of £2 13s 4d and board wages of £37 6s 8d. From 1702 to 1719 two joint grooms served, dividing these emoluments. A single groom served from 1719 to 1727 and two from 1727 to 1761. From 1761 one groom served with a salary of £70. In 1812 the salary was reduced to £67, but total emoluments rose in the following year to £122 in compensation for loss of allowances in kind. Supernumerary grooms were appointed in 1664, 1674 and 1686.⁵

Two pages served from 1660 to 1761, apart from the period 1664-1668, when these places were eliminated from the Household establishment. In 1668 they were allowed wages of £2 and board wages of £26 13s 3d apiece in 1668. These board wages rose to £36 10s in 1674, then fell to £22 6s 8d in 1680. The pages received salaries of £20 each in 1685. This was raised to wages of £2 and board wages of £33 in 1689. This remained the remuneration of the position until its final elimination in 1761.⁶

Three children were appointed in 1660. Two ordinary and two supernumerary servants were provided for on the Establishment of 1 December 1662. Three supernumeraries only were named in 1664; in 1668 two of these were restored to ordinary status. In 1668 wages were £2 and board wages £15 4s 2d for both ordinary and supernumerary children. The number of ordinary children rose to four by about 1670, then fell to one (with three supernumeraries) in 1685. Board wages rose to £27 7s 8d in 1674, then fell to £22 6s 2½d in 1680. In 1685 the sole remaining child in ordinary received a salary of £20 in 1685, the supernumeraries £15 apiece. Three children in ordinary and two supernumeraries served from 1689 to about 1699 at £2 in wages and £33 in board wages. Two served to 1727, and three again from 1727 until the position's elimination by the Establishment of 1 July 1761.⁷

The servant of the scullery was appointed by the lord steward. He received £2 in wages and £33 in board wages on the Establishment of 1702. The place was abolished on the Establishment of 1 July 1761.⁸

The pewter scourer was appointed by the clerks of the green cloth or, from 1782, the clerks of the household [?in rotation]. He received £30 per annum in 1727. The assistant scourers and whitener were appointed by the lord steward. By 1769 there were six assistant scourers at £30 per annum apiece. Their number rose to nine by 1797, then fell to two at £70 in 1815. The two assistant scourers at Carlton House made £40 per annum apiece. From 1830, the assistant scourers at Carlton House were folded into the main Household scullery. The whitener made £30 per annum. By 1803 she was simply listed among the assistant scourers.⁹

Pankeepers were appointed by the clerks of the green cloth or, after 1782, clerks of the household in rotation. In 1664 two pankeepers received £27 7s 6d apiece in board wages. In 1685 one pankeeper was made supernumerary; the remaining servant in ordinary received £18 5s. The Establishment of 1689 restored the second pankeeper and paid both £30 apiece. Two more pankeepers were added in 1727, and additional pankeepers thereafter, but these positions were retrenched in 1761. The position appears to have been abolished on the death of the last holder in 1812.¹⁰

Spicery 1660-1818

The spicery was responsible for the delivery of spices, goods supplied by the grocer and oylman ('including Westphalia hams, olives, pickled cucumbers, mangoes, caviar, parmesan cheese, oysters, truffles, asparagus and ketchup') and, after the abolition of the chandry in 1702, wax candles.¹ Clerks of the spicery were appointed by royal warrant. Originally three in number, they were reduced to two in 1671 and to one in 1685. Two joint clerks served from 1689 to 1706. Thereafter there was one clerk. Under Charles II the first clerk received wages of £32 and board wages which fluctuated between £219 in 1662, down to just £80 in 1680. In addition, he was allowed a proportion of the goods delivered out of his office, as well as fees on new linen, groceries and wax candles, which were calculated to be worth more than £1,000 per annum. The second clerk made wages of £11 8s 1 1/2d and board wages which fluctuated between £164 (by the establishment of 1674) and £68 11s 10 1/2d (by that of 1680). In 1685 the sole clerk received £80. In 1689 the joint clerks divided wages of £32 and board wages of £168. In 1706 this was reduced to £16 and £84 for the sole clerk. In 1761 a salary of £200 was provided. By this time the office was recognised as a sinecure, the work being undertaken by the assistant clerk. In 1812 the clerk was reduced to sinecure status at St. James's with a salary of £145, increased to £170 in 1813 in compensation for loss of allowances in kind. The office was left unfilled on the death of its incumbent in 1818.²

The office of assistant clerk of the spicery, to which appointments were made by lord steward's warrant, was created in 1761 with a salary of £100. It was made redundant at St. James's in 1812 with a salary of £78 increased to £152 in 1813 in compensation for loss of allowances in kind. The office was left unfilled on the death of its incumbent in 1813.³

The porter, first established in 1761, was appointed by the lord steward and made £43 per annum.⁴

Verge c. 1673-1837

The verge was that area within twelve miles of the royal Household, excluding the city of London and other liberties. The board of green cloth exercised legal jurisdiction over, and served as a court for, this area. The clerical establishment of the verge consisted of a coroner and a clerk, appointed by lord steward's warrant.¹ Although undoubtedly existing at an earlier date, the occupants of these two offices cannot be identified before 1673 and 1688 respectively. Both received wages of £6 13s 4d and board wages of £26 6s 8d replaced by a salary of £30 in 1761.²

Wafery 1660-80

The establishment of the wafery consisted of a yeoman and a groom, appointed by lord steward's warrant. At first these two posts were apparently combined but from 1661 they were held separately. In 1662 their remuneration was fixed at wages of £5 and board wages of £27 7s 6d for the yeoman and wages of £2 13s 4d and board wages of £15 4s 2d for the groom. The office of yeoman, made supernumerary in 1662, was not filled after the death of its holder in 1664 and was abolished in 1668; that of groom, made supernumerary in 1662, was abolished in 1680 when the existence of the department came to an end.¹

Woodyard and Coalyard 1660-1837

The woodyard, redesignated the coalyard in 1761, provided fuel for the royal Household.¹ In 1660 the establishment of the woodyard consisted of a clerk and a sergeant appointed by royal warrant and yeomen, grooms and pages, appointed by lord steward's warrant. In 1662 the remuneration of the clerk was fixed at wages of £6 13s 4d and board wages of £54 15s. The position was supernumerary 1664-68. Between 1685 and 1689 the office was combined with that of clerk of the bakehouse, pastry, poultry and scullery with a salary of £91 13s 4d. In 1689 the remuneration was fixed at wages of £6 13s 4d and board wages of £73 6s 8d. Between 1702 and 1761 the office was combined with that of clerk of the pastry and scullery. During this period, the officer was entitled to lodgings at Whitehall and poundage on the business done in these departments. The clerk of the coalyard received £171 in 1761. The office became a sinecure at St. James's in 1812 at £183. This was increased to £200 in 1813 in compensation for the loss of allowances in kind. In 1820 the office was re-established as part of the main Household.²

The remuneration of the sergeant was fixed at wages of £11 8s 1½d and board wages of £24 6s 8d in 1662. The office was reduced to supernumerary status in 1664 and restored in ordinary by 1670 as that of sergeant and first yeoman. The board wages were fixed at £54 15s in 1674 but reduced to £38 11s 10½d in 1680. The office was abolished in 1685.³

Three yeomen were appointed in 1660. The number was reduced to two 1662-64 and again in 1668, then to one in 1673. During the reign of Anne the office was held by a woman with the designation 'first servant'. Remuneration consisted of wages of £5 and board wages fluctuating between £26 13s 3d and £45 12s 6d under Charles II before being fixed at £45 in 1689. In 1761 a salary of £120 was provided. In 1812 this officer was transferred to the establishment at St. James's with a salary of £87 increased in the following year to £163 to compensate him for the loss of allowances in kind.⁴

Three grooms were appointed in 1660. The number was reduced to one in 1662, raised to three (serving the woodyard and scullery) 1664-68, then reduced to two in 1668 and to one in 1685. Two grooms served from 1689. Remuneration consisted of wages of £2 13s 4d and board wages which fluctuated under Charles II between £26 13s 3d and £40. In 1685 a salary of £30 was provided. In 1689 wages of £2 13s 4s and board wages of £37 6s 8d were substituted. The offices were abolished in 1761. Supernumerary grooms were appointed in 1662, 1664, 1680, 1685 and 1697.⁵

Two pages were appointed in 1660. The Establishment of 1 December 1662 reduced one of these to supernumerary status. The Establishment of 1664 abolished the ordinary page, and allowed for a single supernumerary page at £2 in wages and £10 in board wages. The position was finally abolished by the Establishment of 1 October 1668.⁶

The Establishments of 1662 and 1664 list two woodbearers at £1 10s 8d apiece. By 1674 one woodbearer made £2 in wages and £6 1s in board wages.⁷

The porters of the coalyard were appointed by the clerks of the green cloth or, from 1782, the clerks of the household in rotation. As established in 1761, there were six coal porters at £40 apiece. Two porters of the coal yard at Carlton House were established in 1812 at £50 per annum apiece. In 1815 the number of coal porters to the main court was reduced to two at £61 per annum apiece. In 1830, the coal porters at Carlton House were absorbed into the main court.⁸

Watchmen 1702-1837

Some watchmen below stairs appear to have been appointed by the lord steward; others by the clerks of the green cloth (or, after 1782, the clerks of the household) in rotation. As established in 1702, a single watchman at St. James's Palace made £27 7s 6d. In 1726 a further four watchmen were added at £20 per annum. By 1800 the watchman at St. James's made £45 7s 6d. The watchman at Kensington was established by 1761 at £18 per annum. A watchman at the Queen's House appeared 1781-1812. 1812 saw the establishment of a house watchman and an outdoor watchman at Carlton House at £55 per annum apiece; a house watchman at Kew; and one at Brighton. In 1820 the watchman at Buckingham House was established at £118, the assistant watchman £36 10s. In 1830 two subordinate outdoor watchmen at Buckingham House were added at £55 apiece, but the watchman at Buckingham House fell to £80; in 1834 he was further reduced to £70 per annum. In 1830 the assistant watchman fell to £36 10s. The watchman of the Pavilion at Brighton made £76 per annum until 1830, when he was reduced to £60.¹
