

The Public Rooms: Privy Chamber

Gentleman Ushers of the Privy Chamber 1660-1837

The gentleman ushers of the privy chamber, have Power of commanding all Officers under them in the Privy Lodgings, (the Bed-Chamber excepted) and the Honour of leading the Queen in the Absence of the Lord Chamberlain. They likewise attend in the Closet at the Chapel, where no other Gentleman-Usher waits.

They were four in number, appointed by lord chamberlain's warrant.¹ Their remuneration amounted to £200 consisting of wages of £150 and board wages of £50. Early in the period, they were also entitled to diet and lodging when in attendance, riding wages and fees of honor which averaged about £30 per annum under Anne.² An extra gentleman usher was occasionally appointed.

Grooms of the Privy Chamber 1660-1837

According to the Household Ordinances of Charles II, the grooms of the privy chamber were responsible for manning the doors into the privy chamber. However, by 1720 they had largely lost their attendance ‘but on extraordinary Occasions, as Coronations, &c. and on Ambassadors.’¹ They were appointed by lord chamberlain’s warrant. During the reign of Charles II their number was six; during that of James II it was reduced to two; from 1689 it was fixed at four.² They received salaries of £73 consisting of wages of £20 and board wages of £53.³ Early in the period, they were also entitled to diet and lodging when in attendance, candle ends, livery worth £40, riding wages and fees of honor which averaged about £30-40 per annum early in the eighteenth century.³

Under Charles II, assistant grooms, also known as ‘grooms of the privy chamber in ordinary standing supernumerary’ were appointed at £20 per annum.⁴ Between 1731 and 1740 an extra groom was occasionally appointed.

Presence Chamber

Gentleman Ushers Daily Waiters 1660-1837

The four gentleman ushers daily waiters attended in the presence chamber. They swore in officials nominated by the lord chamberlain and received the orders of the lord or vice chamberlain for the public rooms. Thus, 'all under Officers above stairs are to obey them.'

The gentlemen ushers daily waiters were appointed by lord chamberlain's warrant.¹ The senior gentleman usher customarily held the post of gentleman usher of the black rod, an officer of the order of the garter. The two offices were held concurrently except in the case of Sir John Ayton who resigned the office of black rod to the second usher, Sir Edward Carteret, in 1671 while remaining senior usher until the following year.² Until 1765 the senior usher and black rod was chosen from amongst the existing ushers; thereafter he was selected from elsewhere. Each gentleman usher received a salary of £150 consisting of wages of £20 and board wages of £130. Early in the period, they also received diet and lodging when in attendance, riding wages, fees upon swearing in new officers worth about £30 under George I, and fees of honour worth about £30 per annum early in the eighteenth century.³ The gentleman usher, black rod received an additional fee of £44 6s 8d, a gold chain and medal worth £60, and a robe worth £29 as well as other perquisites.⁴ An extra gentleman usher served 1715-16.

From 1662, except for the reign of James II, an assistant gentleman usher daily waiter served. He was also appointed by lord chamberlain's warrant and enjoyed a salary of £66 13s 4d, and, early in the period, riding wages and fees of honour worth £30 under Anne.⁵

Gentleman Ushers Quarter Waiters 1660-1837

The gentleman ushers quarter waiters (or, later in the period, quarterly waiters), who were eight in number, waited in the presence chamber, giving directions to the servants of the public rooms when the daily waiter was absent. They were appointed by lord chamberlain's warrant.¹ Their remuneration amounted to £50, consisting of wages of £10 and board wages of £40. In addition, early in the period they were entitled to lodgings when in attendance, riding wages, and fees of honour worth about £30 under Anne.² Extra gentleman ushers were appointed in 1718 and 1719.

Sergeants at Arms 1660-1837

The sergeants at arms to the court generally waited in the presence chamber, carrying the maces before the King when he processed to the chapel or the House of Lords. As this implies, they assisted in providing security in the public rooms, and might be required to arrest or detain malefactors. They were appointed by lord chamberlain's warrant. As a general rule their appointments were embodied in letters patent under the great seal. They included a corps of sergeants attached to the court, designated in the lists below simply 'sergeants at arms' and individual sergeants serving particular officers.¹ They all enjoyed the same basic remuneration. This originally consisted of a salary of 12d a day and an allowance in lieu of diet of 15d a day. In 1663 these sums were raised to 3s and 2s 6d respectively amounting to an annual total of £100 7s 6d.² This was paid at the Exchequer except in the cases of the lord chancellor's sergeant who was paid at the hanaper and the city sergeant who was paid from the revenues of London and Middlesex. The sergeants at arms were provided with maces and collars and were also allowed riding wages, fees of honour and fees on the commitment of prisoners.

Originally numbering 16, the court sergeants were reduced to eight in 1685.³ These offices were granted for life until 1677 and during pleasure thereafter with the exception of Edmund Williamson who was appointed for life in 1698.

The sergeant at arms attending the lord chancellor was appointed for life until 1713 and during good behaviour thereafter. He was regarded as an officer of the House of Lords and from 1693 received an allowance of 10s a day for every day for which the House sat.⁴ In 1806 this was replaced by an annual allowance of £1,000.⁵

The office of sergeant at arms attending the speaker of the House of Commons was held for life until 1693 and during good behaviour thereafter. The position was, however, complicated by the interest which the House of Commons took in the identity of the individual whom they regarded as their own officer. At the Restoration in 1660 four individuals, Michael Crake, Edward Birkhead, Richard Bishop and William Bishop, were living and in possession of letters patent from Charles I granting the office to them successively. Ignoring their interests, the House of its own motion appointed James Norfolk to the post on 25 April 1660. By letters patent of 7 May 1661 the Crown suspended the previous grantees from the execution of the office and granted the reversion to Norfolk who was formally admitted on 23 May following.⁶ Norfolk was suspended by the House on 2 June 1675 and William Bishop was finally admitted pursuant to an order of the lord chamberlain of 8 October.⁷ While Bishop formally occupied the office until June 1693 the duties were carried out by two court sergeants, John Topham and Richard Shoreditch between 1678 and 1692.⁸

The sergeant at arms to the Treasury held office for life until 1684 and during pleasure thereafter. The office was abolished in 1832.⁹

The office of sergeant at arms to the city of London was held on a life tenure until 1672 and during pleasure thereafter. It was abolished in 1782.¹⁰

Cupbearers 1660-1782

The cupbearers, carvers and sewers were ancient offices whose duties were to serve the king on bended knee when he dined in public. As the Sovereign gradually abandoned this practice between 1685 and 1727, these positions became sinecures. The cupbearers were appointed by lord chamberlain's warrant. In 1660 they were five in number. On the death of Sir William Fleetwood in 1674 they were reduced to four. Three cupbearers were appointed during the reign of James II. From 1689 the number was fixed in principle at four.¹ The offices were abolished in 1782.² The cupbearers each received wages of £33 6s 8d plus riding wages.³

Esquires of the Body 1660-1702

The esquires of the body were supposed to sleep in the presence chamber, under the canopy of state, for the Sovereign's protection during the service of 'All Night.' They were appointed by lord chamberlain's warrant. Originally four in number, they were reduced to two on the accession of James II in 1685. They were abolished on the accession of Anne in 1702.¹ The esquires of the body each received wages of £33 6s 8d.²

Pages of the Presence Chamber 1660-1837

The pages of the presence waited in the presence chamber and looked after the fires and performed other menial tasks upon the orders of the gentleman ushers. They were appointed by lord chamberlain's warrant. Six pages were appointed in 1660-1 of whom two had been retrenched by 1685.¹ Thereafter the number remained fixed in principle at four until 1812 when it was increased to six.² The remuneration consisted of wages of £2 and board wages of £23 amounting to £25 a year. Early in the period they were also allowed riding wages, livery worth £1 and fees of honour which came to a little over £4 under Anne.³ In 1821 the pages were divided into two classes with four pages in each, the first class with salaries ranging from £230 to £260 and the second with salaries ranging from £140 to £170.⁴

An extra page was appointed in 1718.

Guard Chamber

Sewers of the Chamber 1660-1782

The sewers of the chamber attended in the guard chamber, performing menial tasks at the direction of the gentleman ushers. They were eight in number and were appointed by lord chamberlain's warrant.¹ These offices were abolished in 1782.² The remuneration amounted to £38 15s 7d consisting of wages of £11 8s 1d and board wages of £27 7s 6d. Early in the period they were also allowed fees of honour, worth about £5 under Queen Anne³ Extra sewers were appointed in 1720 and 1723.

Grooms of the Great Chamber 1660-1837

The grooms of the great chamber attended in the guard chamber and served as internal court messengers. They were appointed by lord chamberlain's warrant.¹ They were 14 in number between 1660 and 1702 except during the reign of James II when they were reduced to ten. They were permanently reduced to ten in 1702. The salary was £40. Early in the period they were also allowed riding wages, livery worth £1 and fees of honour yielding about £3 per annum under Queen Anne.²

Clerks of the Cheque to the Messengers 1660-1837

The clerks of the cheque to the messengers were appointed by the lord chamberlain. Originally, there were two such clerks of the cheque. One was eliminated on 14 Nov. 1782.¹ Circa 1695 they were paid £49 17s 6d per annum apiece plus fees for 'chequeing.' After a scandal involving messengers' bills was uncovered in 1699, this was raised to £99 15s under Queen Anne.²

Messengers 1660-1837

According to the Present State of the British Court:

These Messengers are chiefly under the direction of the Secretary of State, being always ready to be sent with all manner of Dispatches Foreign and Domestick: they are also employ'd with the Secretaries Warrants, to take up Persons for High Treasons, or other Offences against the State, or which do not so properly fall under the Cognizance of the common law; and are, perhaps, not proper to be divulg'd in the ordinary Course of Justice. Such prisoners as they apprehend are usually kept at their own Houses, for which they are allow'd by the Government 6s. 8d. Per Day. When they are dispatc'd Abroad, they have an Allowance for their Journey, as stated, viz., to Paris 30l. to Holland 25l. to Edinburgh 30l. to Ireland 30l. and so to other Places in proportion, part of which Money is advanc'd to them for their Journey. They wait 20 at a time, Monthly, distributed as follows, viz., four at Court, five at one Secretary's Office, five at the other, and two at the third Office for North Britain, three at the Council Office, and one on the Ld. Chamberlain.¹

The messengers of the chamber were appointed by the lord chamberlain. For most of the period, they were forty in number with salaries of £45 per annum. Early in the period they had livery worth £10 per annum and badges of office. By 1836, each messenger made £34 18s plus an allowance of £260 per annum.² Their number was reduced to 34 in 1782, nineteen in 1796, eight in 1798 and seven assigned to the King's service in 1799. In 1837 six were assigned to the King, one to the lord chamberlain.³ Extra messengers were appointed from 1660 to 1700 and again from 1722.

Separate messengers were appointed, especially early in the period, to attend individual government officers. Unfortunately, information about rights of appointment and the appointments themselves is often difficult to obtain. For example, it would appear that the chancellor of the Exchequer had long been entitled to the services of two royal messengers. Although sworn in pursuance of a lord chamberlain's warrant it seems clear that the messengers were in fact nominated by each succeeding chancellor and held office during his pleasure. The arrangements seem to have broken down during the tenure of the younger Pitt. No appointments have been traced for either of his periods in office. However, Petty appointed Charles Butts on 2 Oct. 1806. In 1836 the two messengers to the chancellor of the exchequer were transferred to the Treasury establishment.⁴
